A passion project with heart

by Luca Barbieri

In the quiet, creative community of Nimbin, a small but meaningful project has been making tails wag for years. It's called 'Rhys' SuperDogTreats', and behind it is Rhys Walden-Goodlet, a young entrepreneur with a love for dogs, food and hands-on work.

The idea first took shape back in 2016, when Rhys began selling homemade dog treats from a table at the Nimbin Farmers Market. Fresh out of high school, he was looking for a way to keep learning, creating, and staying connected to the community.

What started as a simple idea quickly grew into a genuine project rooted in care, curiosity and dedication.

Rhys' interest in dog treats began during his high school food technology classes. "One day we made dog treats," he said. "I liked doing it, and our dog Tommy loved them."

From there, the idea evolved. With the help of his mum and a support worker, Rhys began researching what dogs can safely eat. They explored books, on-line resources, advice from vets, and even held small tasting sessions to see what dogs enjoyed most.

Over time, they experimented with a wide range of ingredients, from dried fruits and vegetables to nutrient-rich baked biscuits made with organic blueberries, turmeric and parsley. They even tested plant-based options for four-legged vegans.

For several years, the project ran in collaboration with the Nimbin Neighbourhood Centre, where Rhys had access to kitchen equipment, dehydrators and a supportive learning environment.

The space offered much more than tools. It provided opportunities to build skills, confidence and independence, while being part of a vibrant community.

Then Covid arrived, and like so many small projects, things had to change. The collaboration came to an end, but Rhys didn't stop.

Today, he continues to produce treats on a smaller scale, focusing mainly on dried liver snacks, a favourite among dog owners and especially popular as training treats.

For Rhys, the project is about more than just selling treats. It's about learning, routine, responsibility, and understanding nutrition for both dogs and humans.

When asked how people react to SuperDogTreats, Rhys smiles. "People love my treats because they help them train their dogs. They also like the project and want to support it."

And when asked about the future, his answer is simple: "Yes, I want to continue. It makes me happy!"

'Rhys' SuperDogTreats' are currently available on Fridays in Kyogle, or in Nimbin town by appointment. Orders can be made directly, phone 0491-190-494.

Supporting this small local business means supporting passion, perseverance and a love for dogs that shines through every batch. And treat your dog while you're at it.

You can follow Rhys' journey on YouTube: Rhys' Super World.

A lot of people feel intimidated by car maintenance, why do you think that is, and how do you help students get past that?

Car maintenance and repair are often mystified, and the information simply isn't accessible to many people, which can make it feel daunting.

The best way students get past this is through a practical, hands-on approach, especially when they're working with their own vehicle.

They experience first-hand how understandable and manageable it really is. Plus, Byron Community College is a fantastic place to learn. It's a beautiful campus with a very laid-back atmosphere.

What's one simple car-care tip you wish more drivers knew before something goes wrong?

Number one is getting familiar with your car manual. It can seem like a daunting book to tackle, so during the practical part of the class we refer to it together and help decipher the information.

What would you say to someone who's on the fence, wondering if this class is really for them?

Consider the benefits: you'll save money, develop a better rapport with your mechanic, and gain a clearer understanding of their work.

Your car is a big investment, and understanding it better will keep it on the road longer and running more smoothly. Prevention is always better than cure. Plus, this knowledge can open the door to further study and more advanced maintenance skills.

The next class is on 21st March, 9am-5pm at Byron Community College, Mullumbimby; web: www.smithart.com.au or: <https://byroncollege.org.au>

Nimbin cops to the rescue

by Ela Zerubbabel

A shout out and heartfelt gratitude to the fantastic efforts of Stephen Buchanan and Ryan Laver from Richmond Police District (Nimbin station) whose commitment saw them finding and bringing back my two grandsons (9 and 11 years old) and their father who were lost in Mount Nardi forest, making it out at around 2.30am.

Heartfelt thanks to David Richardson, Georja Waddington and Kyle Gowans from NSW police, who were also involved in the search party.

The search was smoothly co-ordinated by Fergus Hayes from police search and rescue.

The team's willingness to venture into the forest at night on a difficult track with countless barriers, to bring them home safely, avoiding a long cold night without shelter, was a bloody brilliant effort.

Community opposes footpath plan

Residents of The Channon are calling on Lismore City Council to halt plans to construct a footpath on Standing Street, a proposal the community has consistently opposed since 2023.

In December, Council voted 10-1 in favour of the footpath, despite sustained objections from residents and local organisations.

During that meeting, councillors were told that The Channon Public School and its Parents and Citizens Association (P&C) supported the project. Both the school and the P&C have since confirmed this was incorrect.

The Channon Public School P&C has written formally to councillors stating it does not support the footpath. P&C president China Tisdall said the decision was unanimous.

"The P&C has met and it is unanimous that we do not support the proposed footpath at all. We believe it would reduce safety for our children and represents an unnecessary waste of resources," Mr Tisdall said.

The project is funded under Transport for NSW Get Active program, intended to encourage active transport. Under Get Active guidelines, shade trees should not be removed.

In 2023 residents of every occupied house in the village signed a petition opposing the footpath as detrimental to the village. After continued objections, in 2024 Council commissioned a safety audit and argued the footpath was required due to pedestrian risk.

Residents say key questions remain unanswered, including why no safety audit has been conducted on other, more hazardous streets in the village, and how concreting over an existing grass verge improves safety.

Standing Street resident Billie Beasley-Payne, who grew up in the village, said the street has long been a safe route for children.

"I walked and rode my bike to school along this street for years," Ms Beasley-Payne said.

"We don't need this path. Concrete paths are slippery in the wet, increase runoff and drainage problems, and this 1.8-metre-wide path would remove shade trees and permanently change the character of our green village."

Councillor Jasmine Knight-Smith has lodged a rescission motion, giving Council the opportunity to reconsider the decision.

"We are asking councillors to listen to the community this time and take our very real concerns into account," Ms Beasley-Payne said.

A community letter calling on Council to review its decision has been endorsed by a wide range of local groups, including The Channon Public School P&C, The Channon Pre-School Committee, The Channon Hall Committee, The Channon Resilience Hub, The Channon Tennis Club and The Channon Fishing Club.

Why is our best and safest medicine still illegal?

by Michael Balderstone

Someone said to me, "MardiGrass has sold out, gone commercial." No place does rumours as well as Nimbin with our cannabis infused imagination in top gear most of the time.

Later I realised it will be because Oztrix are selling the tickets this year for the first time. They're a young Brisvegas crew who've been to MardiGrass before, love it and want to help us.

Ticket prices are still the same; haven't increased in a decade, I think. Oztrix has put a tiny surcharge on top. There's no sell-out, and I assure you we'll be as grassroots as ever.

We had our first MardiGrass meeting this year, totally unexpected, but excellent. I ended up with a big list of jobs, but much is already in place. All the signs are for a good one with some legendary and interesting visitors from America coming, I hope.

Ethan Nadelman has been to MardiGrass years ago, and it'll be good to hear firsthand from him how it's going in Trumpyland.

He's the founder of Drug Policy Alliance, an influential non-profit organisation working to end the war on drugs, and he's had widespread backing from billionaire George Souros. He advocates for drug policies, "grounded in science, compassion, health and human rights," just like us.

Steve DeAngelo is also coming, and he is infamous in America for his activism and advocacy for cannabis since he was a teenager.

He founded the famous Harborside Dispensary, which was the subject of Weed Wars which you may have seen on Netflix. He also helped found the Last Prisoner Project and wrote The Cannabis Manifesto: A new Paradigm for Wellness.

Then there's Sue Sisley, an American psychiatrist who was kicked out of the Arizona Uni for her views on drugs, weed and psilocybin. She founded the Scottsdale Research Institute to conduct FDA approved clinical trials and has led the way in the States with research on pot and mushrooms.

Sue has some sight difficulties, so if she can't make it, I'm thinking of inviting the smoking nuns from California, the Sisters of the Valley. They're not normal nuns, but wear habits, live in a community and put their faith in the healing power of cannabis.

They grow their own weed and make medicines from it.

Other guests coming include Dr Alex Wodak and all the Legalise Cannabis MP's. We've also invited Michael Pettersson, the Labor MP in Canberra who initiated the laws so locals in the ACT can grow a couple of plants, legally.

Other stuff happening, and+ in the pipeline includes a $1000 prize donated to the most creative and best message in the Sunday Rally. A terrific line up is already locked in for the Sk8 Park High Vibes stage, and any musicians who would like to play at MardiGrass should contact us soon please.

Best is to fill out the forms on: nimbinmardigrass.com under 'participate'. If you want to play music, or perform in other ways, or have a stall, or volunteer, send in an application on the website. Anything else you're keen to tell us or suggest please email: head@hempembassy.net

For anyone still wondering why we are protesting with so much legal weed available these days, there are two big issues on the top of the agenda: we're not allowed to grow our own plants, and we're still not allowed to drive with any THC in our saliva.

As I write this, we're impatiently waiting for the NSW Premier to tell us the outcome from his 'expert working party' on whether he will allow us to drive if we have a doctor's prescription, similar to all the people taking Big Pharma opiates, like Endone.

It's bad enough that they are funnelling us all down the doctor's race to buy their legal and mostly imported hydroponic and irradiated mediweed. Now we are only allowed to drive if we use that medicine rather than our own. This all greed and fear-fuelled nonsense but the doctors are the new dealers and they have to protect their patch as I see it.

The general feeling is the prescription licence is better than nothing. We've all seen the highway patrol cars hanging around the village this summer with their little blue saliva collecting sticks, looking for likely transgressors of the new world order.

If Premier Minns decides not to let us drive legally there is talk of a march down the highway to his office. Might take a month or two but there are plenty of takers.

I can imagine us turning up in Macquarie Street, a ragtag mob with dogs and shopping trolleys, lots of homeless and hopeless, unemployed with nothing better to do. It will possibly set back cannabis law reform another decade! Hopefully he'll let us drive and we can stay home and look after our gardens.

Meanwhile MardiGrass26 meetings are in the HEMP Bar every Friday from 4.20 and everyone is welcome. We're always open to new ideas for the protest weekend and we're also looking for help in a few specific areas.

We need beds for visiting speakers. We need a shuttle bus, (or a car would do) to drive people who struggle with the walk back and forth to the showgrounds, and we need someone to create a good chai stall for next to the Indica Arena stage.

Nimbin Numbers on the move

by Jayne Alleman

Well, it's been a hell of a ride, and I've enjoyed every minute of it (I have been in business for 23 years), but it's time to get in the slow lane and give up doing tax returns.

I would like to thank the thousands of clients since 2008 who have had faith, trust and loyalty in me over these years to do their tax returns.

I will be continuing my BAS and bookkeeping agency but from a different office in town, which is conveniently situated.

My present BAS and bookkeeping clientele have advised me that they will continue being my clients, which means I have a decent client base already. I thank them for their faith in me and my work.

I will also be doing volunteer work for certain not-for-profit agencies around town, playing bowls, swimming, reading and watching Judge Judy.

I wish all the thousands of ex-tax clients a lovely life and a beautiful day.

Coal port blockaders in court

by Param Berg

I attended Newcastle magistrates court, along with 60-70 other arrestees squeezed into the same small courtroom at the same time, and one alone on a big wall screen, on 13th January.

We had all been told by legal organisation Climate Defence Australia, contracted by Rising Tide, that it was obligatory to appear physically in court, unless absent with a really solid excuse. This was true, but also frustratingly unnecessary for the many long-distance travellers, as ultimately and as expected, the whole hearing was adjourned for a long month.

However, it was also agreed between counsel, prosecution and magistrate that our attendance at the following mention was not required, as CDA will again be representing us (excepting one or two self-representing). Sighs of relief all round.

The magistrate appeared to be improvising his response to the situation, and seemed not specially prepared for it. He was heard to mutter "... that's the plan anyway, but if it comes unstuck..." The court had only opened for business after the Christmas break one day earlier.

A couple of arrestees who were on bail had to have their bail conditions varied so that they could actually enter Newcastle when our cases are finally tried. This could be sooner or later or never, it seems, with most cases from the 2024 blockade still not resolved at this point.

This is in no way the fault of CDA, it's down to the police and the system. However, our representative is permitted to appear next month by video from Sydney, the magistrate commenting that "We have to drag ourselves kicking and screaming out of the caves," if I heard correctly. And he did very courteously thank us all for attending this time.

Rising Tide typically took advantage of the situation by creating a cunningly managed press conference outside the courthouse, which made it to TV and radio and even a mention in The Guardian.

Many of we arrestees then enjoyed the rest of the day in cafes and around town, culminating in a magnificent shared evening meal at the great community asset known as Panchamama House, with an optional yoga class for starters.

Democracy matters in Mur'bah

by Richard Hill

Liberal democracies aren't just wobbling, they're being shaken to the core.

Freedoms many of us assumed were secure – free speech, free assembly, the vote, an independent judiciary, civil liberties, a free press – are under attack across the world.

In their place, we're seeing the rise of swaggering populists who trade in racism, misogyny and state violence.

We need to face this squarely. Is Australia's democracy under threat? And if so, what can civil society do to defend and deepen it?

In 2026, The Politics of Life launches 'Democracy Matters' a new series bringing together some of the country's sharpest thinkers, activists and public intellectuals to examine how democratic life is being reshaped, eroded and defended.

These monthly events will be held at the newly refurbished Regent Cinema, Murwillumbah.

The first talk on Monday 2nd March, by bestselling author, psychologist and social researcher Hugh Mackay, will probe the moral climate of our politics – the kindness, the cruelty, the fractures – and ask: Democracy, kindness and compassion – can they go together?

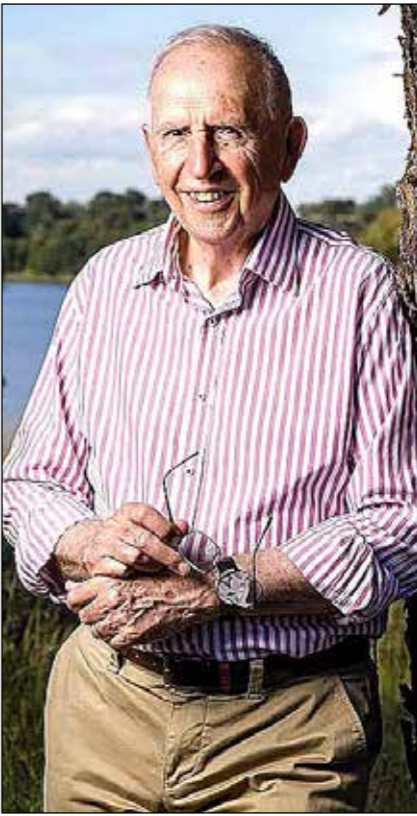

In the 2026 season of public talks, indigenous activist and writer Thomas Mayo will argue that reconciliation is a democratic necessity, not an optional add-on; former high court judge Michael Kirby will remind us that human rights must be democracy's backbone and former human rights commissioner Chris Sidoti will show how quiet, incremental policy shifts can hollow out freedoms before we even notice.

Later in the year, philosopher Simon Longstaff examines what ethical democratic leadership looks like; while journalist and filmmaker Santilla Chingaipe challenges us to rethink our national stories because they shape our democracy.

Palestinian activist Mussa Hijazi and Jewish campaigner Michelle Berkon will unpack what Australia's response to Gaza reveals about our democratic commitments and our failures; and Professors Susan Forde and Daniel Angus will examine how universities, media ecosystems and AI shape – and sometimes distort – democratic life.

The monthly 'Democracy Matters' events will showcase local musicians and creatives, celebrating the arts as a cornerstone of civic life, with food and refreshments available at The Regent.

The aim is simple: to strengthen civic bonds, encourage open dialogue and

AI-driven cultural hegemony

In the late 1920s, an Italian named Gramsci developed a theory called cultural hegemony. Gramsci was searching for a reason that could explain why people voted contrary to their own interests and often strenuously maintained and worked for a system which exploited them and enriched a small minority at their expense. Over the years his concept was shortened to the adage: ruling class, ruling culture. The novelists George Orwell and Aldous Huxley developed these ideas in their dystopias as they elaborated the means by which ruling elites control and subjugate the populous. However, neither divined the complexity, specificity and universality of the mechanism of control that would emerge in the 21st century during the computer age.

Neither for a second believed that people would happily offer up all their personal information; their fears and prejudices, their job titles, their earnings... even the make-up of their meals to unscrupulous operators who would sell those details on. The benign outcome of this was when we even mentioned goods and services anywhere near our devices... adverts for these items, seemingly by magic, suddenly appear on our 'feeds'. Annoying but easily ignored.

Unfortunately, one of the services we get is political representation. Our governments are formed by the parties we buy into, and these parties determine whether we want a system that respects the law and our right to our day in court or wants to return to a period where the ruling classes have no such restriction on their power. This seems to be increasingly the nature of the new divide. The new player in this hegemonic space is a real time AI-driven platform called Palantir. This US/ Israeli company has created a flagship product called Gotham which allows government agencies, the military and corporations the ability to analyse everyone's data and feed them the information they want them to see in real time. It's this program that ICE (Immigration and Customs Enforcement) is using to monster the citizens of their country, notably Minneapolis; by using it to racially profile people at the fringes of society, enter their homes, schools, hospitals and kidnap them without warrants or any judicial overview whatsoever. This is the real time dystopia that Orwell was searching to describe but he failed to see how complex, integrated and all pervasive the systems would become. The real horror of this is that 20% of people across the globe are so controlled by their Palantir-driven feeds that they sing the praises of the lawless gangs and believe they're actually under attack from their nannies, their gardeners and other minimum wage compatriots with a different skin colour. We are just as under attack from Palantir as the people of the US. Do yourself a service and make sure you go off social media for a week before any election. They will try to manipulate your vote... they know your fears and if the Palantir-owning classes can scare you at the right time with the right piece of misinformation, they will get you voting for people who don't have your interests at heart. Dangerous times indeed... stay calm and stay skeptical.

You're Going to Die

ENQUIRIES 66891831

Paint or die

by Jimmy Willing

As I sit at my work bench painting my picture of the old Richmond River High School, I'm set to thinking of my own school days and my eccentric art teacher Mr Burke who was irreverently nick named Bushy. Bushy was a lovely old man, however he could not control his class and fell prey to the bad deeds of a bunch of bad apple brats of which I was one. There were some teachers/ wankers/bashers that deserved tooth and nail what we gave out to them, but not the hapless Mr Burke. Mr Burke was a soft easy target and now that I'm old I do feel ashamed of what we did to him. The endless hours spent trying to knock off his toupee, the crafting of hollow clay hand grenades that blew up everything in the kiln and our constant setting him up to fail in front of the other teachers. It was funny as all get out, but if by some chance you are still alive Mr Burke, I am truly sorry for my part in it all. Anyway I digress, for what I wanted to say about Bushy Burke was his funny way of starting each art lesson. Bushy would enter the art room, clap his hands together and exclaim: "Yours is not to reason why, yours is but to paint or die." He thought it was so funny and he would laugh at his own joke while we looked at him blankly. So today as I paint the old school house to pay for my supper I can hear his funny mantra in my head. The old school house went up in flames last year and its clean up and demolition are now almost complete. As I work at recreating the old school in paint, I can hear the rumbling of the machinery crushing up the last of it and loading the rubble into the trucks that thunder down my street. It's a crazy world, I came back home to paint a picture of local legend, Hector the crocodile and I now find myself chronicling the last days of North Lismore as we know it. It's all very perplexing, but at the end of the day, "Mine is not to reason why, mine is but to paint or die."

Practising social cohesion in tough times

by Jo Young

As watching the news becomes more bizarre and distressing, it feels like hard work to not go crazy in a crazy-making world. I ask myself, what can I do to rival dehumanisation, 'othering', and build hope in my community? It can be challenging to stay in harmony within myself and with others. This isn't simple or easy, but I do know that my weekly visits to the Nimbin GROW grassroots mental health group help. It helps to share what is in my heart and mind with others who are committed to understanding me, themselves and others. The world can feel very unfriendly so being with friendly people who help me keep my balance, is medicine for my soul. It is the plurality of people, united by practising intentional friendship, growing our understanding of each other, and learning how to navigate life's challenges together that makes the GROW movement so unique. The GROW grassroots mental health core program was last updated 15 years ago, and in February 2026 updated and modern Blue Book – the GROW program will be launched, the culmination of a four-year, user-led project gathering lived experience input from members all over Australia, New Zealand and Ireland. The language has been updated to be more inclusive and accessible, and there are now two versions of the program available. One version of the book is purely secular for those who prefer not to engage with references to a faith-based content. The other version contains both the secular program plus faith-based options. Both versions can be used together in groups. GROW groups have people with many different spiritual frameworks and everyone is welcome, from atheists to agnostics to devout followers of different faiths. Some groups have wiccans, Bahais, and even the odd Jedi Knight! You can join the Nimbin GROW group face-to-face, or online via Zoom. The GROW Group is now in our third year and we enjoy wonderful, honest, friendships. We support each other to improve our mental wellbeing by practising and sharing GROW's unique program. GROW's program is written from lived experience of what has worked for people to improve their mental wellbeing. It's not everyone's idea of a good time, but for those of us who love to talk about the deeper issues of life, and like this structured way of working together, it has a profound impact. It has become a weekly activity for supporting our wellbeing. GROW is free, anonymous, confidential and meets every Wednesday from 12.30 to 2.30pm in the dance studio at Nimbin Community Centre. There are also weekly groups in Lismore, Murwillumbah, Tweed Heads, Mullumbimby (women's group) and on-line. For more information call Jo on 0483-888-844 or visit: grow.org.au

Chamber Chat by David Hyett

February marks a period of consolidation alongside forward planning for the Nimbin Chamber of Commerce. Several long-running projects have now been completed, while new initiatives are emerging directly from member feedback and committee priorities. A special acknowledgement goes to parents running businesses while juggling childcare and family responsibilities over the Christmas-New Year period. The effort required to balance work, family and community during this time deserves recognition. Christmas trading delivered mixed outcomes, with strong visitation at times alongside cautious consumer spending. To better understand the impact on local businesses, the Chamber will shortly release a short Christmas trading survey. Results will help guide marketing priorities, event timing, and future advocacy. Member participation is warmly encouraged. The Chamber recently joined the community in recognising the vital contribution volunteers make across the village. On Tuesday 31st March at 6pm, Nimbin Interagency will host a volunteer awards night to honour those who work behind the scenes to make our village the special place it is. Nomination details are available at: nimbin.org.au The Chamber continues to work closely with Lismore City Council during a period of significant internal restructuring. Council has invited the Chamber to review and comment on a draft Economic Development Strategy, alongside discussion of the current Destination Management Plan, which has a stronger tourism focus. Together, these provide an important opportunity to shape how Nimbin is represented and supported within broader regional strategies. Accommodation remains a key economic driver for the village. The Chamber is promoting an accommodation directory via: nimbinvillage.au – a local platform featuring business profiles, events, community groups and a local marketplace. Accommodation providers are encouraged to list their properties to support local events and help visitors stay longer in the village. Based on strong support shown in last year's member survey, the Chamber allocated funds to support Nimbin's local markets. This work is now complete, with new signage installed. Our markets continue to attract visitors and support local producers and creatives, operating on fourth and fifth Sundays of the month. The Chamber has also made a financial commitment to supporting the inclusion of Bundjalung bird names on plaques along the Rainbow Walk. This initiative acknowledges Country, language and cultural context while contributing to the ongoing care and presentation of this important village space. Looking ahead, the Chamber remains focused on balancing day-to-day advocacy with longer-term projects that strengthen the village economy, culture and visitor experience. Next committee meeting: Thursday 19th February, 5.30pm at Nimbin Bush Theatre.

Busy start to 2026 for CWA

Nimbin CWA doings by Sue Stock

After the holiday break, Nimbin CWA re-opened its doors on 14th January with a nutritious and affordable lunch of pumpkin focaccia plus two varieties of home-made cake, much appreciated by all. The op shop was in full swing, receiving donations and selling lots of very low-priced and quality clothing and bric-a-brac to happy customers. Our op shop is pretty amazing and provides support to our Nimbin community and others. We collaborate with Nimbin Neighborhood Centre to provide material aid such as blankets, clothing and kitchenware for those in need, on a daily basis. We provide free clothing, bedding and kitchenware to rough sleepers as needed, provide free clothing to local preschools when requested and purchase new winter clothing and bedding to distribute for free to those in need during winter months. We post regular donations of quality clothing to remote op shops, eg Fitzroy Crossing. We also keep on hand emergency clothing supplies for community members in need, and collaborate with Nimbin Youth when requested to supply free bedding, clothing etc to youth in need. Finally, all monies raised after expenses are directed back into the community. Thank you to everyone for hosting the first Sewing Repair Day. It was a great success. Sharing the space and chatting all things sewing with wonderful creative people who love up-cycling and restyling. Open to CWA members and general public, this activity will be held regularly every third Friday of the month. A sewing machine and a few resources to work on garment repairs will be available. The next session is Friday 20th February. Come along and bring a project if you have one.

Delivering for Lismore The Channon Road

Lismore City Council

Lismore City Council is undertaking extensive road rehabilitation works on The Channon Road, Dunoon, from early February. This state and federally funded project will restore almost 2km of pavement and is anticipated to take up to five months to complete, weather permitting.

To improve safety and resilience, the work includes road height increases between 150mm (15cm) and 450mm (45cm) in select locations. Assessments show these changes are unlikely to alter existing stormwater flow or affect nearby properties.

The road will remain open under single-lane throughout the project, with stop-slow traffic control in place as needed. Please allow extra travel time.

We thank the community for its patience as this work progresses. Visit lismore.nsw.gov.au for updates.
